Thank you and sorry for the trouble. We're putting so much together that I'm googling sites and researching...but tight on time so that's why I reached out to you experts.

Hi Dianna—The Navy successfully transferred their first parcel of property to the City of SF/Treasure Island Development Authority in May, and continues to work on cleanup at the remaining five groups of parcels. This summer, an extensive amount of fieldwork associated with radiological scanning and removal of radiological materials, including complete excavation and removal of their Solid Waste Disposal Areas, has continued. The Navy cleanup is being conducted under the oversight of the State regulatory agencies, including lead agency DTSC, the Regional Water Quality Control Board (RWQCB), and Department of Public Health (CDPH). The Navy will be seeking clean closure approval from these state agencies after their cleanup efforts have been completed, so these issues similar to HP may surface later in the year and early next year at Treasure Island. EPA continues to receive inquiries from the public, and refers these to the State Agencies. Community inquiries about health concerns have been referred to ATSDR. Attached is the last BRAC report we submitted FYI.

Hi Nadia, we need to get back to Dianna soon. Let her know about any field work that is going on and that the state continues to be the lead. Thanks.

Loren

Sorry. Really don't know. That would be Loren.

No funding after sept 30 so the region will stop answering the Mail on that soon. Yippee Dianna, Here's one contentious issue at Hunters Point right now. Let me know if you'd like further info.

John

Hunters Point Naval Shipyard (San Francisco, CA): The Navy is expected to complete the first transfer of cleaned up property to the City the week of Sept 7, 2015, after the City voted to accept 3 parcels on Sept 1. Two parcels with more significant reuse potential are slated for transfer in 2016, pending resolution of radiation testing issues associated with multiple buildings which the Calif. Department of Public Health (CDPH) is raising. CDPH is asking the Navy to redo the testing, which would result in a year or two delay and at a cost of up to $8 mil. The Navy believes the current data is good, and while EPA acknowledges that the Navy did not precisely follow the testing plan, EPA believes the buildings do not present an unacceptable risk. After over a year of debate with CDPH, the Navy has begun elevating the issue to the Governor's office, and recently briefed Congresswoman Pelosi's Chief of Staff. The City is equally frustrated with CDPH's position on this matter. (EPA Region 9 point of contact, John Chesnutt, 415-972-3005)

Thanks again, Harry, for the note back. I note that there don't seem to be FF in the districts of the three CA representatives (Capps, McNerney, Cardenas) on the House Subcommittee on Environment and Economy, Committee on Energy and Commerce.

However, we've been asked to provide a brief paragraph for several visible sites in CA. Based on the info from Harry, we will write up something on Edwards and McClellan. Charlotte asked me to request from you a paragraph on Treasure Island and also one for Hunters Point. I can go back and look at your weekly reports, but you may be able to quickly provide what's hot, most visible at the moment. No need for a one-page Q/A – just looking for a paragraph on each.

Catch is – I need it by 1 pm tomorrow. We pre-brief Mathy on Thursday and the hearing is Friday.

Thanks, and let me know if you have questions.
